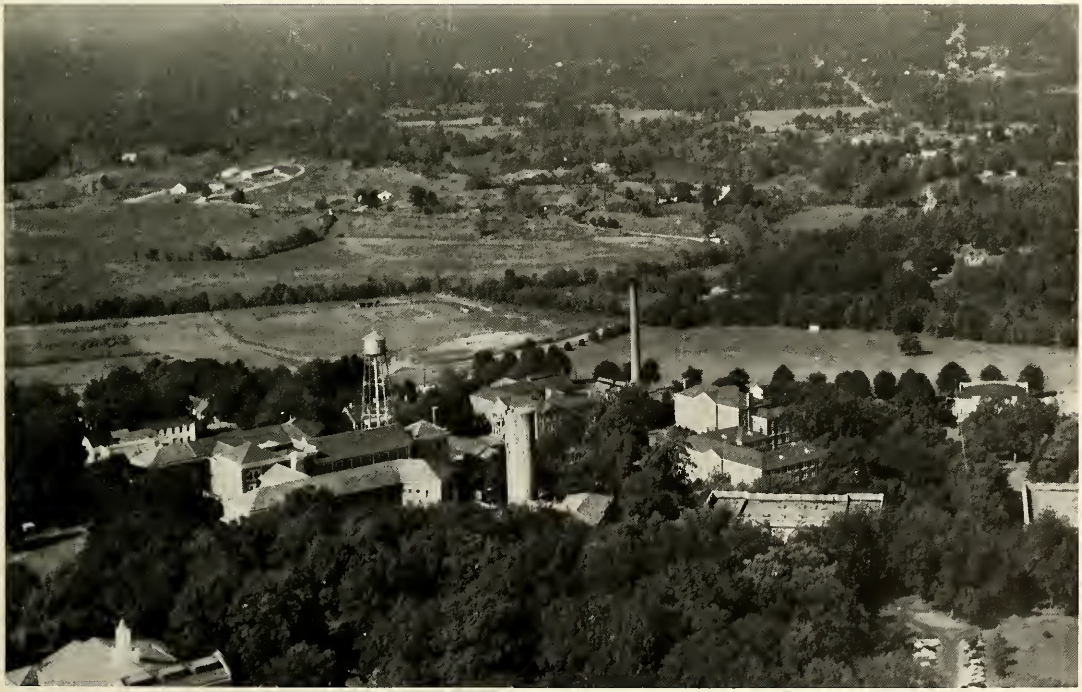
MONTAGE 63/64

Alabama College

Montevallo, Alabama

The person to whom the Senior Class has chosen to dedicate the nineteen hundred and sixty-four MONTAGE is one of Alabama College's most popular professors. During our four years at Alabama College we have come to know, admire, and respect this person as an educator and a real friend. This person has always taken an active interest in student affairs serving on many faculty-student committees. He has continually made himself available whenever students need his advise or support. Through his calm, serene nature and sincere respect toward students, he imparts to each of us a respect for academic accomplishment. It is with great pride and much pleasure that we dedicate the nineteen hundred and sixty-four MONTAGE to you — Dr. James D. Thomas.

From a mere dot in a clear morning sky, the speck of movement grew in size and dimension as it came closer and closer until, in a flurry of blue-white feathers, the Alabama College Falcon settled on his roost at the top of the Tower and looked over his domain. Journeys were nice but it was good to be home.



As the Falcon sat watching the activity below him, memories came flooding back, memories of what his school stood for. He remembered the various Montage theme presented through the years: Time Changes All Things, AC During the Four Seasons, the Alabama College Spirit, Pathways, and he wondered . . . Where was it? Where was the one thing a person could put his finger on and say, "THIS is Alabama College"?

As the Falcon pondered, the hour moved closer to completion and suddenly in the midst of his reverie, the bird's thoughts were jarringly interrupted by

The Falcon picked himself up off the ground and looked at the top of the Tower from which he had come rather suddenly. Well, that certainly was new. With one more backward glance at the unexpectedly articulate Tower, the mascot started his search of the one thing that signified his school . . .

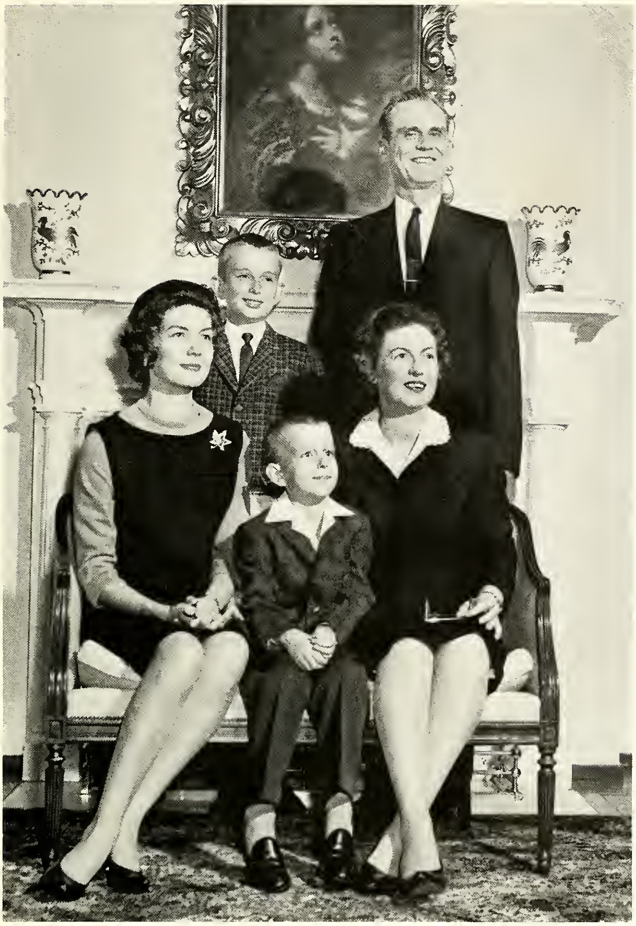
ADMINISTRATION

Still a bit shaken by his rather sudden acquaintance with the Alabama College chimes, the Falcon headed for the nearest possible haven, Palmer Hall, site of the administrative offices of AC. Perhaps here at the hub of activity, the nerve center of Alabama College, would be found the central theme. The Falcon smoothed his still-ruffled feathers one more time and pushed bravely into the bustle of activity located behind the big glass doors of Palmer. The first stop was the office of Alabama College's chief executive, Dr. D. P. Culp, the head of the sprawling liberal arts college.

From the President's office the trail led to the office of the Treasurer and Business Manager, Lee A. Barclay and the assistant Treasurer and through the hum and activity of the secretaries to the Registrar, Virginia Hendrix and Director of Admissions, Kermit Mathison.

A quick drop to the ground level of the impressive structure took the Falcon to the offices of Dr. John Bennett Walters, Jr., Dean of the College; Mrs. Adelaide Paty, Dean of Women; James R. Wilkinson, Dean of Men; and Ralph Sears, Director of Public Relations.

DR. D. P. CULP .... President of Alabama College



The pages of this year's Montage contain a new face — that of Dr. D. P. Culp, president of Alabama College. Dr. Culp comes to us from Livingston State College, where he also served as president. During his few months here, Dr. Culp has shown a sincere interest in the welfare of the students as well as a tremendous spirit for the traditions and practices of Alabama College.

The students of Alabama College look forward to many more years under the capable and worthy leadership of Dr. Culp.

Perhaps here, thought the Falcon. Perhaps here. But along with the administration should be the faculty. They also make the school run.

So, picking up a few feathers that had dropped off due to his fall, the Falcon took his leave of Palmer and set out to view the people whose job it is to lead and instruct the students of Alabama College.

"The best place to start, I suppose," decided the bird, "is with the department heads." And having so decided, the Falcon took off for Comer, carefully checking before entering the structure of learning for other noise-makers added to the campus in his absense. This bird was no fool.

"That was surely it," panted the somewhat winded Falcon after completing his tour of the faculty. "They possess the knowledge the school is noted for, the high standards, the . . ." This summation came to a somewhat grinding halt as the mascot noticed a student strolling by, wearing an Alabama College sweatshirt. Intelligence the faculty had, conceded the Falcon, high standards, yes, but where is a professor wearing an Alabama College sweatshirt?

"All other things considered, we must have spirit," declared the bird and swooped over the campus observing the students.

"Lot of people there," sighed the bird wearily as he rested his tired wings. "More of them than the administration and faculty put together. Boy, if size means anything, THIS has to be Alabama College. I wonder what gives them the spirit they have? Oh ho, darkness falls." For a Falcon, this Falcon was pretty poetical, "And I must find a haven for the night."

FEATURES

This having been decided, the bird headed toward the closest lights, those being at Palmer. When he entered, he was greeted by the sight of a lobby full of people piling into the auditorium. Intrigued, the Falcon followed and there he found the source of the Alabama College spirit.

Having left Palmer, the Falcon began to stroll around and ended up in Napier parking lot. Being a naturally curious bird, the mascot looked at the auto tags to see who was from where. And in doing this, he noticed a remarkable number of "Alabama College" stickers on the rear windows of the cars. "Aha," thought the bird, "Pride." Thus having struck a new trail, he took off to find out what caused the pride. He stopped at the first group of people gathered together and discovered . . . Clubs.

"One thing about these students," mused the Falcon as he watched them go strolling by him. "They all look tired. Wonder why?" With this observation, a particularly worn looking group walked past and the mascot, not being shy in the least, followed them. They led him across campus and down the hill toward New Residence Hall to the scene shop. Here they started working on a College Theatre set while the Falcon watched, rather confused.

"They look tired, but they seem to be enjoying themselves. Maybe there's something else here, spirit and pride both." As he pondered this, a group walked by mumbling about "working on the paper," and "going to the senate meeting" so the Falcon, as always, followed.

A somewhat confused Falcon returned to his perch on the Tower and surveyed his campus again. First he looked toward Palmer where the administrative offices were housed and made a note in his notebook. Then his gaze turned to Comer where he started his tour of the departments. A pensive look appeared and another mark was made. Next his eyes swept over the entire campus taking in the student body and all their activities. A final mark. The bird stared at the book for a moment and thought. "It's the administration that signifies the school. They make it run. It has to be them. But it's not all them. The faculty imparts the knowledge, which is why the college is here in the first place. Maybe it's the faculty. Yet where would they be if it weren't for the students? But the students wouldn't be here if it weren't for the faculty and the administration is indispensible in either case. Maybe Alabama College is the students and faculty . . . or faculty and administration, . . . or students and administration . . . or . . . maybe the theme is the activities . . . or the features . . . or the . . .

Bong Bong Bong Bong

Bong Bong Bong Bong "Here we go again,"

Bong Bong Bong Bong

thought the Falcon. "There's one thing about this campus. It's loud."

BONG BONG BONG BONG BONG BONG BONG

As the Falcon observed his surroundings from where he landed, the happy thought finally hit him. There was no one theme to Alabama College.

The theme was the entire college, every phase of it. Without one of its attributes, none of them would be as complete. The Falcon sighed, looked up at the big speakers on top of the Tower, stuffed his wings in his ears, and started to climb back up.
